The XM radio traffic and weather broadcasts offer a service to the subscribers such as myself that I consider invaluable. When I am traveling to another metropolitan area where I have no idea or the traffic flow, I am able to tune into that specific area and hear detailed traffic reports every few minutes. We, as XM subscribers, pay a monthly fee to recieve the most up to date and reliable radio broadcasts, and portions of those broadcasts include such locally oriented programs as the traffic and weather reports. Surely the FCC and Congress can see that XM radio's first ammendment rights are being cast aside. I hope, as well as the millions of other XM subscribers, that the just decision will be made, and traffic and weather reports will remain on XM's airwaves. This seems a perfect candidate for a Supreme Court ruling on Congress's and the FCC's unconstituitional censorship of a corportation's first amendment rights.
